In this letter you will discover the real story of Bismilla, a child who comes from Afghanistan and lives in Poland. Once in Poland he has the courage to go towards other children and to make new friends, even if they don't speak the same language.

There are many children throughout the world who, like Bismilla, have to leave their country. Their family flee because of war, hunger and poverty. They can be welcomed in other countries when the countries agree to give them protection and to help them settle down.

Where they are in a new country, the children get together and become friends, even when they don't speak a common language.

November 20 is the International Day of the Rights of the Child.

In the next page you can discover those rights. And we propose that you make a friendship kite.

Convention on the Rights of the Child
Tapori posters created about the articles of the Convention

Every child has the right to live with his parents and to join them if they left the country.

Family

The country should respect the parents and extended family's right to raise their children.

Every family can practice their own religion.

Justice

If children appear before a judge, they have the right to be defended.

Every child has the right to live, be taken care of when he is sick.

Parents should receive the support and protection needed to help their children live well.

Live

Children should be protected from violence and hard work.

The country should preserve the child and his family from any form of exploitation.

Every child has the right to a name and nationality.

Every child should be treated equally.

Peace

We cannot send children to war.

Every child has the right to attend school and to learn what is important to live well.

Education

Each child has the right to have time to play and to take part in activities. It's important in order to grow up well.

Express Oneself

All children have the right to talk freely and share their ideas.

Activity A

After you read the story of Bismilla, answer the following questions:

1) What did you like in the story of Bismilla? .....

2) Do you think it's easy to move to another country? Why? .....

3) Bismilla made friends with Madi. And you, would you go to someone different from you to make friends? How would you do that? .....
