• INJUSTICES •

In your daily life, there must be many things that shock you, that get on your nerves and there are also things that upset you, because you feel that something is not fair. It makes you deeply unhappy or worried, either for yourself personally, or for the child or adult who is suffering this injustice. You feel this is a situation that you would not accept for yourself, that it is an injustice for it troubles you so much that you keep thinking about it afterwards. You know this is something that should not happen.

With this Newsletter, your group will create a compass to show you the way to stand up against the biggest injustices that your Tapori group feels it must challenge.

Show us the way!

INDIVIDUALLY

- What is the difference between a situation that annoys you, and a situation that makes you angry because it is unjust?
- How do you feel about it? Why is it unfair? Find some examples that help you to understand the difference.

IN YOUR TAPORI GROUP

- Share your examples of injustice and listen to one another. Think together whether these examples fit with what you, as a group, consider are injustices.
- Which injustices seem to go together? Try to group them into four main types of injustice.

It's time to be creative now and make your compass against injustices!

It can be small to fit in your pocket or big so as to be seen from far away.
It can be in 3D or drawn on paper. Decorate it as you like.
What matters is that it represents who you are, so that it may be a point of reference for you through this new stage of working together.
